

Hi Dharmendra,

I saw your presentation on transitioning to a different database system. You gave clear reasons for the need to change.

Discovering the capability of the new system to process a variety of data quickly was quite informative. Staying ahead with technology is vital, and you made understanding this a breeze.

I appreciate your honesty regarding the learning curve associated with this technology.

Initiating the process with smaller-scale projects is a sensible way to guarantee smooth operation.

Your plan to use both the existing and upcoming databases for our most crucial data suggests careful planning. You are taking a considerate approach to these changes.

The presentation was easy to follow and gave me a lot to consider, particularly about how non-relational databases can support our tech progress.

I am excited to see the benefits your plan will introduce.

All the Best!